

READY 準備 感 覺 畫가 Alexander Young Jackson

- painter Alexander Young Jackson

〈1〉 Alexander Young Jackson (everyone called him A. Y.)

was born to a poor family in Montreal in 1882.

〈2〉 His father abandoned them when he was young, and

A. Y. had to go to work at age twelve to help support his brothers and sisters.

〈3〉 Working in a print shop, he became interested in art, and he began to paint landscapes in a fresh new style.

〈4〉 Traveling by train across northern Ontario, A. Y.

and several other artists painted everything they saw.

〈5〉 The "Group of Seven," as they called themselves, put the results of the tour together to create an art show in Toronto in 1920.

〈6〉 That was the show where their paintings were severely criticized as "art gone mad."

〈7〉 But he kept painting, traveling, and exhibiting, and by the time he died in 1974 at the age of ninety-two,

A. Y. Jackson was acknowledged as a painting genius and a pioneer of modern landscape art.

- American writer Marjorie Kinnan Rawlings

〈1〉 Marjorie Kinnan Rawlings, an American author born in Washington, D.C. in 1896, wrote novels with rural themes and settings.

〈2〉 While she was young, one of her stories appeared in The Washington Post.

〈3〉 After graduating from university, Rawlings worked as a journalist while simultaneously trying to establish herself as a fiction writer.

〈4〉 In 1928, she purchased an orange grove in Cross Creek, Florida.

〈5〉 This became the source of inspiration for some of her writings which included The Yearling and her autobiographical book, Cross Creek.

〈6〉 In 1939, The Yearling, which was about a boy and an orphaned baby deer, won the Pulitzer Prize for Fiction.

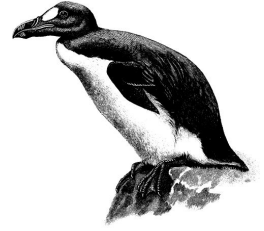

〈7〉 Later, in 1946, The Yearling was made into a film of the same name.

〈8〉 Rawlings passed away in 1953, and the land she owned at Cross Creek has become a Florida State Park honoring her achievements.

- the great auk

① Rich in protein, full of nutritious fats and oils, the great auk was great, although it was a flightless bird.

② Found on the rocky islands and coastal areas on both sides of the North Atlantic, great auks were like a somewhat smaller version of the dodo, and they had the brains to match.

③ Starting in the early 16th century, sailors began marching the helpless creatures up the gangplank and pushing them into the ship's storage area by the hundreds.

④ The great auk was considered great food, and the tasty bird was hunted for its feathers, skin, and eggs.

⑤ Unfortunately, you'll never get to feast on the great auk's tender meat.

⑥ The last pair was killed on an island off the coast of Iceland back in 1844.

- Ivan the Great

- 〈1〉 Through conquest, diplomacy, and his rejection of Moscow's two-hundred-year loyalty to the Mongols, Ivan the Great made Russia a European power.
- 〈2〉 When he assumed the throne, his realm consisted of just fifteen thousand square miles, less than half the size of present-day Indiana State of the United States.
- 〈3〉 With his son Vasily, he nearly tripled Russian territory.
- 〈4〉 Ivan the Great dreamed of making Russia the Third Rome, cherishing a monk's prophecy that while "the two Romes have fallen, the third does endure. Your Christian Empire shall last forever."
- 〈5〉 To fulfill his vision, he claimed to be a direct descendant of the Roman emperor Caesar Augustus, and he married the niece of the last emperor of Byzantium (the second Rome).
